The Earth's Crust

About 2,500 million years ago the earth on which we live was a ball of gas which, on cooling, grew smaller and became liquid. The liquid continued to cool giving off some of its heat by radiation and when liquids grow colder, they solidify. The crust of the earth is the solid matter resulting from this cooling, but probably inside the earth there is still a mass of molten material which has not cooled as much as the outer crust. The crust on which we live and from which we obtain almost everything, is not rigid. Volcanoes such as Etna and Stromboli in the Italian islands remind us from time to time of the force and heat below the ground. Various places on the earth are subject to earthquakes, the country that has suffered the most from these being Japan. The study of earthquakes has shown that the origin of many of them is under the bottom of the sea and near the coast of a continent or a large island. In an earthquake the surface of the land may move suddenly in any direction, bringing houses down, changing a straight railway track into a useless zigzag, altering the courses of rivers, changing the shapes of hills, and sometimes causing an immense sea-wave to rush on the nearest shore and add to the destruction. This tidal wave, as it is called, is wrongly named because it has nothing to do with the tide.
